Salt Lake City has more in common with Torino, Italy, than just both being previous Winter Olympic Games venues. Torino is one of Salt Lake City's sister cities—and, apparently, we share an interest in compelling, cutting-edge video art.

In November and December 2010, subway stations in Torino were the gallery space for TorinOver10, the latest in a series of installations launched in 2007 showcasing video art pieces from around the world. Among those invited to submit work to the festival were Another Language's Elizabeth and Jimmy Miklavcic, whose Salt Lake City in 90 Seconds is part of the program. Curator Elisa Lenhard describes the theme of the program as "the environment, its relative contradictions and commonplaces by analyzing the difficult and complex situation in which the planet finds itself in this historic moment, where the future appears far from bright." You can experience the work in the environment of the University of Utah's Marriott Library Digital Scholarship Lab this week. (Scott Renshaw)
